Steady performance despite market volatility in the first half of 2018 validates the sector's defensive profile.

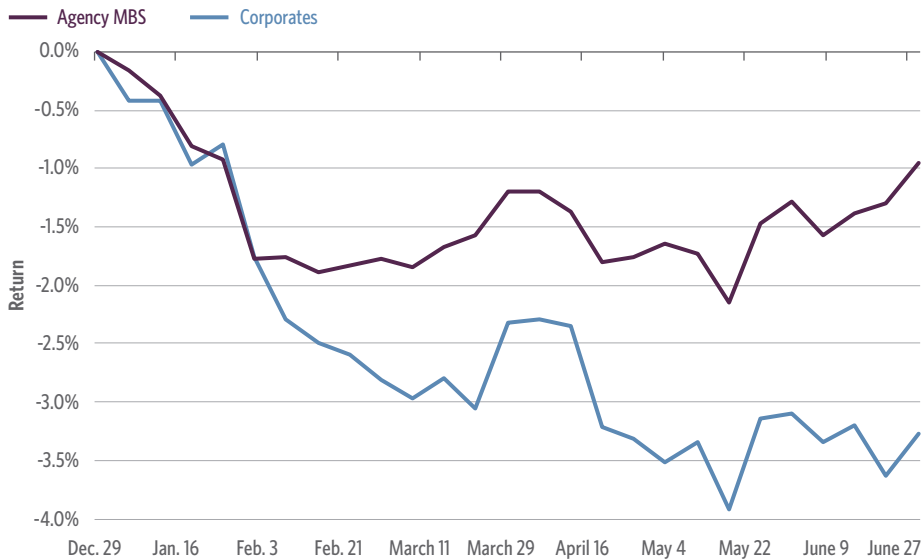

Agency MBS spreads have the potential to modestly widen as levels are still historically tight, and 2018 net supply is expected to exceed that of the previous few years, but carry remains attractive and could absorb most of our expected spread widening. We expect the sector to continue to provide diversification and lower volatility within a broad fixed-income portfolio, as the current environment of range-bound rates, low volatility, and reasonable valuations relative to credit sectors will result in support from investors continuing to look for opportunities to add high-quality spread assets. Moreover, relatively steady performance despite market volatility in the first half of this year validates the sector's defensive profile (see chart, top right).

Agency MBS performance was positive in the second quarter despite headwinds in the form of higher rates and a flatter yield curve. The Bloomberg Barclays U.S. MBS index posted a 0.24 percent total return. Yields ended the quarter at 3.41 percent, wider from the previous quarter, while option-adjusted spreads were roughly 1 basis point tighter over the quarter (see chart, bottom right). Conventional MBS underperformed GNMA, 30-year MBS outperformed 15-year MBS, and lower coupons underperformed higher coupons. Prepayments speeds increased marginally over the quarter.

We continue to favor less negatively convex assets where either the collateral or structure offers some cash flow stability. Accordingly, we find select subsectors attractively priced in the current environment, including longer-maturity Agency multifamily, better call-protected pools, and some collateralized mortgage obligation structures. We continue to avoid assets, such as Ginnie Mae MBS, where valuations are relatively stretched and may be affected more by the Fed's policies or changes in regulatory regime.

Despite market concerns that the Fed's balance sheet normalization would cause spreads to widen significantly in Agency MBS this year, we have seen option-adjusted spreads only a little wider since October 2017, and spreads range-bound on a zero-volatility basis. Yields ended the quarter 3.41 percent, higher than the previous quarter, while option-adjusted and zero-volatility spreads are one basis point tighter quarter over quarter.

Investing involves risk. In general, the value of fixed-income securities fall when interest rates rise. High-yield securities present more liquidity and credit risk than investment grade bonds and may be subject to greater volatility. Asset-backed securities, including mortgage-backed securities, may have structures that make their reaction to interest rates and other factors difficult to predict, making their prices volatile and they are subject to liquidity risk. Investments in floating rate senior secured syndicated bank loans and other floating rate securities involve special types of risks, including credit risk, interest rate risk, liquidity risk and prepayment risk.
