REIT Industry Update

Commercial Real Estate Hits a Pause

After years of REIT outperformance relative to the S&P 500[®] Index, REITs took a breather in 2017. Amidst the expectations of a rising rate environment, REITs finished up 5.22 percent as the 10 year closed at 2.40 percent by year-end. Thus far in 2018, REITs continue to lag the S&P 500[®] Index, up 2.09 percent with the 10 year hitting 2.98 percent.¹ Meanwhile, private market valuations are holding firm, with Green Street Advisors' Commercial Property Price Index suggesting that values have stayed steady over the past twelve months. Their data shows commercial property having fully recovered from the 2009 lows, now surpassing the 2007 peak levels by 27 percent.² Providing support for real estate valuations are capital markets that remain robust with multiple financing alternatives open. With a healthy economic backdrop, growth in real estate demand has been sufficient to stabilize occupancy levels in the mid-90 percent range.³ Steady gains in leasing amidst low supply are translating into solid pricing power for landlords and stable to rising market rents for most subsectors. Guggenheim believes overall property-level operating income is expected to grow at roughly 3 percent annual pace. As a result of the positive fundamentals, REIT earnings should pace in the mid-single digit range for 2018.³ Guggenheim believes dividend growth should parallel earnings growth, as current dividend payout ratios remain below historical norms.

Interest Rate Fears vs. Underlying Real Estate Value

Rising rates have caused some turbulence in recent returns. History has shown that rising 10-year Treasuries have not necessarily caused REITs to underperform vs. S&P500[®] Index over a lengthy period (1.98-12.11).⁴ More recently (1.12-05.18) however, rising rates seem to have hampered relative REIT returns. There are two important factors to consider when examining the recent evidence. Firstly, the initial period of underperformance is generally met with sharp reversals, suggesting much of the initial moves may be an overreaction by jumpy capital markets. Secondly, the private market is poised to capitalize on excessive overreactions—whether driven by rates, management strategies, transitory factors, etc. Private equity has stepped in when public markets don't fairly value REITs. Firms such as Blackstone Real Estate Partners VIII, Brookfield Property Partners L.P., and Brookfield Asset Management Inc. have privatized multiple public companies this year alone.⁵ Guggenheim believes such a valuation backstop, paired with the high current dividend of REITs, should provide investors with some measure of comfort even during volatile times.

The Case for REITs

During the second quarter of 2018, equity REITs delivered a 10.03 percent total return compared to 3.43 percent for the S&P 500[®] Index.¹ Guggenheim feels public real estate offers several benefits for an individual investor's portfolio that are particularly relevant in today's environment:

- REITs may provide attractive current income with the potential for future dividend growth as underlying property cash flows grow over time.
- Real estate provides inflation hedging characteristics as underlying rents, property cash flows, and replacement costs have historically adjusted with inflation over the long run.
- REIT earnings should be relatively resilient during economic downturns as a large portion of rental revenues are derived from contractual lease obligations.

Index Definitions (Each index is unmanaged and it is not possible to invest directly in any index.) S&P 500® Index is a capitalization-weighted index of 500 stocks designed to measure performance of the broad domestic economy through changes in the aggregate market value of 500 stocks representing all major industries. Green Street Commercial Property Price Index ("CPPI") is a time series of unleveraged U.S. commercial property values. CPPI captures the prices at which commercial real estate transactions are currently being negotiated and contracted.

Risk Considerations Past performance does not guarantee future results. These illustrations are not representative of any Guggenheim Investments product. There are risks associated with investing, including the entire loss of principal you invest. In general, equity securities will fall due to general market and economic conditions, perceptions regarding the industries, or factors relating to specific companies. Focusing on an industry/sector may present more risks than investing in securities that are more broadly diversified over numerous industries and sectors of the economy. Investments in REITs entail risks. REITs may concentrate their investments in specific geographic areas or in specific property types, such as hotels, shopping malls, residential complexes and office buildings. The value of the REIT and the ability of the REIT to distribute income may be adversely affected by several factors, including: rising interest rates; changes in the national, state and local economic climate and real estate conditions; perceptions of prospective tenants about the safety, convenience and attractiveness of the properties; the ability of the owner to provide adequate management, maintenance and insurance; the cost of complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act; increased competition from new properties; the impact of present or future environmental legislation and compliance with environmental laws; changes in real estate taxes and other operating expenses; adverse changes in governmental rules and fiscal policies; adverse changes in zoning laws; declines in the value of real estate; the downturn in the subprime mortgage lending market in the United States; and other factors beyond the control of the issuer of the REIT.
